BELFIORE WATERMILL

Among the several mills in the area, that of Belfiore is the only one to have maintained its original characteristics. Dated around the middle of the 1400s, it saw the continuous change of ownership until 1800, reaching the Della Pasqua family. While the modern blades are visible on the outside, an ethnographic museum has been set up inside which houses the ancient millstones, the gears of a milling plant and some evidence of peasant civilization, such as agricultural tools and some everyday objects. To date, the mill is owned by the Municipality of Pramaggiore, which takes care of its protection and conservation.
